Full job description

Our client is one of Australia's best loved brands and their vision runs deep with more than 13,000 team members across stores, support offices and direct sourcing operations. All are focused on designing, creating and curating better, more meaningful products and experiences families can trust.

The driving force behind their vision and business is people, and that is why they recruit only the best talent. Experienced, passionate and focused professionals who share a belief in the power of innovative thinking, taking pride in what they do and the value of individual thought.

As a vital member of the People and Capability team, your role will be to ensure our client continues to attract and retain the people they want by developing, implementing and communicating a culture built on positive outcomes, collaborative teams and shared objectives. Specifics will include developing and promoting employee engagement survey programs, analysis of survey feedback and the identification of key strategy drivers.

Tertiary qualified in Commerce, HR or a related field, you already have an impressive generalist HR track record within a fast-paced, constantly moving environment where employee engagement played a key role. You thrive on the challenge of change and have the unique blend of creative thinking, operational sensibilities and strategic vision. From a personal perspective, your confidence and engagement skills mean you can quickly build credibility and trust at the highest levels.

This is an exceptional opportunity to influence help build the people culture and influence the long-term HR direction of one of Australia's major employers and most loved and innovative brands.
